

Council of State and Territorial Epidemiologists

CONFERENCE SCHOLARSHIP CONTEST FOR EPIDEMIOLOGY STUDENTS

Attention Public Health Students!

The Council of State and Territorial Epidemiologists (CSTE) is holding a contest for one epidemiology student to attend the 2017 Annual Conference in Boise, Idaho this June. You could win roundtrip airfare, a three-night hotel stay and free registration to the largest national meeting for applied epidemiology.

CSTE Conference attendees come from every state, represent all levels of government and academia, and span diverse professional specializations. The conference presents opportunities to network with state, local and federal public health professionals. Last year, 1,400 attendees shared methods and best practices with 578 presentations and 258 posters. Speakers included APHA President Dr. Camara Phyllis Jones, Acting FDA Commissioner Dr. Stephen Ostroff and more.

Consider the benefits of CSTE membership as you build your public health career. Annual student membership is only $30 and includes capacity development and networking opportunities through specialized subcommittees. Members, especially student members, save on conference registration. CSTE's four fellowships – the Applied Epidemiology Fellowship and Project SHINE fellowships – are excellent opportunities for pursuing your public health passion. Visit cste.org and csteconference.org to learn more.

TO APPLY - bit.ly/CSTEScholarship17

Click the link above, complete online form with three short essay responses by March 31, 2017.

The winning student scholar will attend the conference for four days and three nights, arriving June 4 & departing June 7. The scholarship covers roundtrip flights up to $750 total, three nights hotel and conference registration. The student scholar will be guided by CSTE fellows, meet leading state epidemiologists and explore an array of conference sessions. Applicants will be notified by April 28, 2017.

The scholarship was made possible by the charitable donations of CSTE members and conference attendees. Send questions to jariah@cste.org.